

FISHING SEASON WILL OPEN NEXT THURSDAY

ANGLERS PREPARE TO LURE THE FINNY INHABITANTS OF THE STREAMS—POINTS FOR AMATEURS

Along a Promising Pool.

After an Hour's Angling.

A Woman Enthusiast.

The state of Utah says you may go fishing next Thursday. No boy ever received permission from his mother to go down to the creek and fish for minnows with a bent pin and willow pole with more pleasure than the horde of Utah fishermen will welcome the opening of the fishing season the coming week. Ever since the primitive man discovered the finny tribe could be caught with a piece of bait on a curved or hooked bone, fishing has been one of the joys of this life. Time has changed the style of hooks, bait and other tools of the fisherman, but the self-satisfaction in fooling a fish in his native haunts has ever been and will always be.

Fishing is a sort of mania. One gets the first attack of it while still waddling in his kilts and it remains until the full three score and ten has been reached and passed. The older one gets, the more pleasure one receives in fishing, and the habit strikes the rich and poor alike. Whether climbing a rocky canyon in pursuit of the sportive trout or fishing from an open boat in some lake for bass, the same satisfied feeling is there, and the fisherman forgets for the time being the troubles of life, wrapped up in the full enthusiasm of his sport.

Ready for Opening Day.

For weeks fishermen of this state have been patiently awaiting June 15, the day set by law when a person may go out and enjoy the sport denied all spring and summer. Old rods have been taken out and cleaned and the tackle box supplied with new and later style flies in preparation for this day.

NEW PRIEST TAKES HIS VOWS

Michael Haggerty is ordained at St. Mary's Cathedral.

CONFIRM MANY CHILDREN

TWO SOLEMN CEREMONIES ARE CARRIED OUT.

At St. Mary's Roman Catholic church yesterday the Rev. Father Michael Haggerty was added to the roll of priests of the parish, and at the same services there were received into the church 100 boys and girls through the ordinance of confirmation.

Michael Haggerty became a priest at the service begun at 11 a. m., at which Bishop Laurence Scanlan officiated at high mass, and at which Father John J. Guinan was deacon, Father Engster sub-deacon and Father M. J. Engster master of ceremonies.

The actual ordination service was begun just after the reading of the epistle. Father Dennis Kelly read a Latin document, the substance of which was an invitation to the candidate for holy orders to come forward and present himself before the altar for ordination. Then Bishop Scanlan read the instruction required to be given the candidate and to the people. The document read was in Latin, but Bishop Scanlan translated it into English, in order that all present might have full comprehension of its import. It required the candidate to show a good moral character and a determination of the fact that the church is determined that the people shall have good priests. The candidate was appealed to to turn back if he knew of any reason why he should not devote his life to the ministry, and those present were asked to make known any reason, if they knew of any, why the ordination of the candidate should not be proceeded with to completion.

New Priest Is Ordained.

There being no objection from any source to fulfilling the ceremony, the qualifications of the candidate having been adjudged of the best, the bishop then read the ceremony of ordination, finishing by placing the vestments on the candidate and the chalice in the candidate's hand. Then the bishop consecrated the hands of the candidate with holy oil.

From the gospel to the end of the mass the newly-made priest repeated all the words of the bishop. At the conclusion of the mass, Rev. Father Haggerty went to the altar and pronounced obedience to the superior of the Marist order, of which he is now a member.

Many Children Are Confirmed.

After the mass Bishop Scanlan confirmed 100 boys and girls. This proved not only a solemn but an interesting ceremony. The bishop was assisted by Father Louis Sciochetti and Father Deneaf. W. J. Halloran and Mrs. Edward McGurran acted the parts of god-father and god-mother to the boys and girls.

When all had been confirmed Bishop Scanlan explained the nature and meaning of the ceremony, and told the young persons what was expected from them by the church and society. They ought to lead lives that would prove an example to others, he said, and should avoid as far as possible the wickedness of the world.

Programme of Music.

A fine musical programme was rendered, under the direction of Miss Nora Gleason. The following were the principal numbers: Introductory voluntary..... Edward Fitzpatrick. La Hache's "Pro Pace Mass" rendered by the choir with violin and cello accompaniment. For the offertory, "O Salutaris," by

For the past week trips have been carefully planned by those tied up by city life to some favored spot where it is known fish abounds in plenty. For the next three days those who have planned this trip will leave the city by train, wagons, horseback, automobiles and bicycles to be on hand at the selected spot when the sun rolls over the mountain tops next Thursday morning.

A conservative estimate places the number at 10,000 who will begin to whip the streams shortly after dawn on this date. Every river, creek and tiny stream in the state will be lined for almost its entire length by this horde of fishermen, and before the day has passed thousands upon thousands of trout will be hooked. The law says every ditch must have a screen where it is taken out of a stream. Many of these screens are defective and each year thousands of young fish are run into the field to die on dry land.

Plenty of Fish This Year.

The outlook for the opening of the season has never been brighter. State Game and Fish Warden John Sharp says the streams are all well filled with fish. The great work done in the past couple of years in hatching fry and planting them in all the streams of the state has borne its fruit, and instead of depleted trout streams, today fishing is as good as it has ever been in the state.

Millions of fry are planted yearly in Utah streams. Fishermen who ought to know say that fully 25 per cent of these reach maturity and are then taken from the streams by the rod and line. The others become the prey of the older and larger fish, for trout are cannibals. On this account when the fry are planted they are taken to the heads of the streams to give them a chance to grow by keeping them away from the larger fish who always keep in the deep water found farther downstream.

Irrigating Ditches Greatest Enemies.

But by far the greatest destroyer of fish in this state are the irrigation ditches. The law says every ditch must have a screen where it is taken out of a stream. Many of these screens are defective and each year thousands of young fish are run into the field to die on dry land.

For those who have not already selected a place to go on the opening day of the following streams are recommended by an old-time fisherman who has visited every stream in the state. Near the city one may go to either the Weber or Provo rivers, or American Fork creek, Hobble creek or Strawberry valley, the latter place having several small streams where fishing will be good. The higher up one goes on these streams the better the fishing will be, as the water is clearer. However, as there has been little rain this spring, all of the waters are fairly clear and fishing should be good at any place along the streams. The question of bait may bother some of the novices. If you are a true blue sportsman, however, you will use nothing but flies. A man who claims to be a fisherman would no more think of using bait than a hunter would think of crawling upon a flock of ducks and "potting" them. It is an art to catch a trout with a fly and the scientific fisherman is proud of his art.

If you must catch fish, however, and are willing to be looked upon with scorn by the expert fisherman, worms, grasshoppers or minnows will do for bait, and if the water is muddy it is necessary to use bait to get results.

An old fisherman gave some of the following pointers last week for the novice: Never fish down stream. Fish can hear and see and always have their heads pointed against the current. If you are walking down stream, the fish will see you before you see them and many a good-sized trout gets away that might be induced to take a nibble at your hook.

Then again, if fishing up stream, one will almost always hook a fish in the upper jaw, when it is almost impossible for the fish to get away. Fishing down stream the hook is taken from the front and a quick jerk is likely to pull the hook out of the fish's mouth. Always keep out of sight and keep as quiet as possible.

How to Cast a Fly.

In casting a fly do it so the fly will hit the water before the line. Then give it a series of short jerks and if the fish is hungry there is a good chance he will take the fly. If this fails to bring Mr. Fish, it is a good policy to let the fly sink a couple of inches under the water and allow it to float down stream.

In casting a fly as little splash as possible should be made as a hard "swish" is likely to scare the fish away.

Probably the gamest fish in this state are the native, eastern brook and rainbow trout. Of these the eastern brook are the best fighters. In every hole one will find a big fish that is a sort of king pin of the school. He is the first to scent danger and if the fish are hungry is always the first to take the bait. Often fish fight among themselves and old fishermen say fish are frequently caught that show scars secured in a battle under the water.

Hooked Fish Will Bite Again.

Another peculiarity about fish is that they do not seem to suffer any pain from being hooked. Often a fish will be lifted several feet out of the water and then get away. The same fish will raise for the fly again the next time it hits the water and is frequently caught after having got away several times. There have been instances where fish have been caught with hooks in their mouth from former contests with fishermen and the fact that they have carried a piece of steel imbedded in their flesh for perhaps years does not appear to bother them any.

During the last week the sporting goods houses have been doing a larger business in fishing tackle than ever before in the history of fishing in the state. This is a sure indication that this season there will be plenty doing next Thursday when the season opens.
